The TASC program is designed to assist U.S. organizations by providing funding for projects that address sanitary, phytosanitary and related technical barriers that prohibit or threaten the export of U.S. specialty crops. For purposes of the TASC program, "specialty crops" are defined as all cultivated plants and the products thereof produced in the United States except wheat, feed grains, oilseeds, cotton, rice, peanuts, sugar, and tobacco. U.S. public or private organizations, including, but not limited to, U.S. government agencies, State government agencies, nonprofit trade associations, universities, agricultural cooperatives, and for-profit companies may apply for TASC funding. The Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 created TASC, which is administered by FAS. Records may include program agreements, program amendments, approval letters, compliance correspondence, reimbursement claims, evaluations, performance reports, and financial reports.
